LLG Webinar: Independent Review of Children's Social Care

The independent review of children's social care was billed as a once in a generation opportunity to improve outcomes for children and families and put children's services on a sustainable footing. During the review period, we have seen the CMA market study on the children's care market and the national review into the murders of Arthur Labinjo-Hughes and Star Hobson. With recommendations that would see around half a million more children supported through help and support within their families, the care market restructured around regional care cooperatives, and the extension of safeguarding partner status to schools, not to mention an emphasis on information sharing and 'radical transparency' in data, proposed reform is wide-ranging.

In this session James Arrowsmith & Sarah Erwin-Jones will draw on the three reports to offer an insight into the likely direction of travel for children's social care, and the opportunity and risk likely to arise. The session aims to support practitioners to prepare their colleagues and organisations for future change and offer insights that can be used in making decisions today that will help transition organisations towards the children's services model likely to emerge over the coming years.
